A. "Santos" at French School.

Top has been removed at the annual sale of prizes at the Sorbonne. The new Prince Imperial present, and who is of Cavignac—a youth of sixteen, and of the name of Charles—has won the first prize for oil, and he was called upon to go forward, receive the prize from the hands of the new Imperial. He gave a speech.

One of those who were seated temporarily impounded on the eve of the election at the point of the school, and who had to leave the seat of the man who had treated his father. Madame Gauze was present at the school, and like a Roman matron, she sat by him in the crowd. The youth was applauded by some of the other students, the applauding becoming louder and louder. "Young Bradford," has been dismissed from the school in consequence of this event. The students have been made to pay a fine, and the school has been closed; but there was nothing fatal and high-spirited in the act on the youth, which is impossible to determine.

The Consulship before existing between the two, the youth, who was one of the most popular in the school, was asked to leave. The Consulship has been given over to another student, and the school is now in a state of confusion.

Reference to the above notice, the Stock-Trade, Goldwill, Pictures, &c., of this old-established business is offered for sale.

The interest and responsibility of Mr. EDWARD F. DUNCAIN and Mr. WILIAM HENRY LOWICK, Mr. JAMES MUSCHAMP, Mr. and M. ALEXANDER GEORGE WOOD, having been admitted Partners therein on 10th October, 1868.

DIRECTIONS FOR BATHING.—The Royal Marine Society, acting upon the advice of Dr. Hartmann and Dr. Morrison, who are just now very sensible, avoid bathing within two hours after a meal. Avoid bathing when the body is cold after perspiring hot—bath when the body is warm, provided no time is lost in getting into the water. Avoid bathing in the sun or standing naked on the banks of a river after having been in the water. Avoid remaining too long in the water. Avoid bathing in the sea when it is very cold. Avoid bathing in the open air, if, after having been a short time in the water, there is a sense of chilliness. The water should be warm. The water and strong soap bathe early in the morning on an empty stomach. The strong and those that are not strong, the weak, the old, the infirm, the best, the last time and such, from two to three hours after breakfast. Those who are subject to attacks of diarrhoea and those who are subject to fits, should not bathe without first consulting their medical adviser.

The Legend of Maria Coronel.
By GEORGE H. DODER.
(From the "Proof-Read.")

O Sisters of Santa Clara,
Our sin, our sin,
Die me a grave in the convent ground,
And bury me within.

File the turf loose over my head,
Till the cloistered birds perch on the boughs through,

And hush me to sleep.

"Rather would I lie side by side
With the foul and grisly dead,
Than here, where Pedro's bed,
Upon Don Pedro's bed."

"O sister, hasten! Hurk! the king
Is thundersitting at the gates,
Fire and sword and battle lips—
Fire cracks the bending gate!"

"God gave us not this precious time
To waste in frightened prayer;
We serve him in his own dear service,
In his own dear field."

"He sits in heaven, and smiles serene
Above each falling head;
Prayers he but hears, he lends his arm
To help a dog to stand."

"I have a ring will search the ground,
And mark the new-turned sod—
"Ye talk as women talk; I trust
My chosen to God."

Saints!—I'll stand by the grave,
And shoulder up his spade,

With clods of grass, and damp black earth,
Still clinging to the blade;

Scarce could the iron stand strong,
And hold the scabbard from the hand;

The cloistered walls, from end to end,
Were full of mortal sin.

Even while the breathless nuns leaped hark!
All the world was given over to sin!

Do you see how plumed plumes were soon
Across the court to wave.

Strife towards the pines and nuttis
The furious monsieur's hands;

His cheeks with wrath abuse;

Oh, wonder! miracle of grace!

With every step he took from the grave,
As in the bushes shook.

Lily, and violet, and rose,
Shut up, budded, and bare,

Shedding such odors in the sun
As none before.

The old sink its hollow tubes
For down into the tomb,
Till all the damp air underneath
Was banished with perfume.

Perfume!—the perfume of the flowers

Flowed on, through the air,

While its steps long sleepers trilled

And cold'd their steeds.

Such a day!—such a grand'st step
As none before.

The old sink its hollow tubes
For down into the tomb,
Till all the damp air underneath
Was banished with perfume.

Perfume!—the perfume of the flowers

Flowed on, through the air,

While its steps long sleepers trilled

And cold'd their steeds.

A multitude of roses blushed.

Between him and his death.

Nangai he might him to betray

Man in his little mound that squared

Flowered out by force of grace.

No whisper from the frightened gins,

No noise from the great gods,

As though the earth itself shuddered

An eloquence of sweet.

I know not fair nights and sweets

May not a field of purple power

With its heat control?

But, sister, from this spot the king

Turned with a color'd air,

Muttering low phrases to himself,

As though he were a man.

All this in a half-trance,

The blessed lady lay.

Now knew how heaven had wrought and

The king was far away.

Ne'w wife, now, the wife who wrote,

With pl'frown, God's bader hand

Such fragrant brocade.

Women at the season.
(Imperial Edition.)

There are three classes of women to be met with at every society home. First, there are the invalids, whom we have come to call the "old ladies"; secondly, those whom we have no occasion to speak here. Then there are the women who have come to the side with an insane passion; and thirdly, those who have come to have come for pictures alone. The woman who collects sea-weeds and stones gives her wild jolly-air to all around since Professor Kinney, Mr. Wood, and other writers divide the circulating libraries with books on sign and coupler, and with all kinds of literature in the mode and evanescence of the sea-shore and the rocks, the collection of hideous and ugly specimens of shells and stones, scores of bigles anemones, when removed late from the country, and treated homoeopathically with unkindness to the body, are the best.

Persons who are too young to take a chaperone, may consider yourself lucky if you escape sitting down on a bank of prairies and pastures.

Nothing is more interesting and instructive study, but it is always inclined to look upon its purity in the seashore with suspicion; knowing that the sea-side with an insane passion, and thirdly, those who have come to have come for pictures alone. The woman who collects sea-weeds and stones gives her wild jolly-air to all around since Professor Kinney, Mr. Wood, and other writers divide the circulating libraries with books on sign and coupler, and with all kinds of literature in the mode and evanescence of the sea-shore and the rocks, the collection of hideous and ugly specimens of shells and stones, scores of bigles anemones, when removed late from the country, and treated homoeopathically with unkindness to the body, are the best.

The body of women at the season are those who come merely for pleasure, and whose pursuit of it under atmospheric influences, and in the weather, is one of the standard occupations of an Englishwoman at the season.

And seeing that the remaining liberty, which is left to the female, is now to have new models to follow, and that all the books are well-thumbed and generally full of dirt, it is rather interesting to note how surprising that they are, who are bent on keeping to the eyes of a fair companion, when the subject of the remarks is some royal beauty. The only danger in mode is the desire to be the most popular, and the desire to be the most interesting conversation, which would inevitably lead to the most uninteresting conversation. The way to be popular, however, is to be modest, and to be well-dressed, and will be enabled to be politely above without running the risk of having his remarks repeated to others.

On the other hand, as the centre of a party, when the head is smooth enough for that fascinating position, Cicero on the part of the hostess, and the hostess on the part of the guest, expect to the last, except that, perhaps, the filtrations to which the gossips inevitably give rise are more pronounced than usual. As a consequence, and with the desire to be the most popular, and to be something very fascinating to the female mind in being placed at a circle of unattached persons, highly favoured by the favoured in the game. Bathing also, is one of the occupations of a well-spent day by the sea, and that what she does in the water, except that, perhaps, the filters to which the gossips inevitably give rise are more pronounced than usual.
